GOLF WAXING AMONG OWEN.

Champion Miss Harley Thinks Tennis Is Partly to Blame for the Loss of Interest in the Game.

That there could be much more interest in golf among women is shown by the fact that the entries for the recent national tournament were the fewest in years. Miss Katherine C. Harley of Fall River, national champion, says: "Unfortunately it is a fact that outside of the Boston locality golf does seem to be deteriorating among the women. The few new players who take up the game do it in a dilettante sort of a fashion. The truth is, they will not take the time to learn, as the old-timers did, if you can use that word for the women who have been prominent for the last half dozen years or so, and yet are still young. The increasing popularity of tennis has had considerable to do in lessening interest in golf. There is really less time for the younger set in playing tennis for an hour and then enjoying the remainder of the afternoon in a social tea and chat on the club piazza. I confess that I have fallen under the spell of tennis, and I did not begin to play golf seriously this year until about three weeks before the championship."

"If a girl to-day is ambitious to achieve prominence in golf, she must determine to go through a hard course of training and many disappointing defeats for at least two years. Then if she has the golfing spirit in her she may hope to get one of the coveted positions in the semi-finals of a championship. I have been playing golf for about seven years, and the nearest I ever came to the title before this year was a position in the semi-finals in 1903 and 1904. Do I expect to go to England next year and try for the British championship? No, I have formulated such ambitious plans. To be the greatest joy of my life would be to play over some of the foreign courses and study the methods of the leading women in Great Britain."

Miss Harley firmly believes that the high road to success in golf lies in careful professional training from the start. Indeed, she learned her game over three times. She early discovered that she had a jerky style, leading to short driving and mediocre approaching. With a professional's help, she succeeded in breaking herself of this habit, but did not reach the true golfing form until she visited California a few years ago, when a professional taught her more than she ever knew before, and from that time she was able to play high-class golf.

While Miss Harley is not a phenomenal driver, her short work is unsurpassable, and in getting a wonderfully straight ball, whether from the caddy or with the iron she has no superior in America. It was her supremely straight game that gave her the championship victory. Miss Harley had the hard end of the draw and she is now glad of it, for it made her victory all the more satisfactory. Besides defeating Mrs. T. H. Polhemus in the final, she previously put out Miss Margaret Curtis, the former champion, Miss Mollie B. Adams and Mrs. Caleb F. Fox, a triumvirate the like of which few if any championship victors have ever had to face.

"If any section of the country is to furnish new players of prominence in the future I think it will be the Boston district," said Miss Harley. "I know of no other locality where an equal amount of interest is being taken. I can cite several clubs where a number of girls have engaged from 10 to 20 lessons from the professional instructors. The ease with which the game can be played there is surely a great aid in its favor. The distances from the city to the leading clubs are not so great as in New York, or even Philadelphia, and it is possible to get to the links, play an 18-hole round, and be home in time for luncheon. Here in New York, with possibly two or three exceptions, a game of golf means the greater part of the day. This, however, cannot be the whole reason for lack of players, but it certainly has considerable influence. Half a dozen years ago the metropolitan clubs had perhaps more active women golfers than any other locality, but now there are scarce clubs where the women were most numerous the older players are seldom seen and it is impossible to find a new one."

Miss Harley is very strongly in favor of having the women's championship hereafter played in the localities where the greatest number of women can reach the links with the least possible time and expense. "The New England club alone," she said, "could furnish fully 40 entries. This would make it worth while for many of the newer ones to go through a course of serious practice if for nothing more than just to see what they might do." Chevy Chase, on the contrary, was only able to supply three contestants. Holding the big event in an inaccessible place is in itself a detriment to the sport, for with a limited field, the natural inference is that the interest is much less than really the fact. It must also be remembered that it is not so easy for women to travel as for the men, and some effort should be made to bring the tournament to the women instead of asking them to go to some club that may have good links, but is otherwise inconvenient. Miss Harley was asked who most to herself she considered the best women golfers in the country. "That is too personal," she replied, smiling. "I must leave myself out. I call Miss Margaret Curtis and Miss Fanny Osgood of Boston the best women golfers in America. They are invariably steady and reliable, but, as in everything else, you can't be up to championship winning form every day in the year."

A POULTRY FOOD THAT HAS

"MADE GOOD."

The best selling article in not always the most desirable, but repeated orders from the same parties are always indicative of real merit, because you "can't fool the people all the time." The following letter from J. E. Nash, Starksboro, Vt., proves conclusively that Page's Perfection Poultry Food has "made good" with the poultrymen of his vicinity. He says: "I have used and sold your 'Page's Perfection Poultry Food' ever since the first order was sent out. Customers who at first bought a dollar's worth at a time, now order a barrel. I have sold, in the past, several other kinds of poultry food, but have decided to handle only yours, which is by far the best seller. I want the agency for another year, and you may ship me a barrel Oct. 1."

If you want to know more about this food and the best ways of using it, write to C. S. Page, Hyde Park, Vt., for his booklet, "Profitable Poultry." It will be sent free, postpaid, to anyone mentioning this paper.

ABOUT THE STATE

The Rev. and Mrs. Robert J. Barton are moving from Cambridge to Burlington. Owing to a throat difficulty Mr. Barton recently resigned as pastor of the Congregational church at Greensboro and he is going to Burlington to receive medical treatment.

M. H. Buckham, president of the university of Vermont, Burlington, has gone to Washington, D. C., where this week he will attend a meeting of the presidents of the state universities of the United States. The meeting will be held Tuesday and Wednesday.

Theodore N. Vail of Lyndon Center, president of the American Telephone and Telegraph Co., called for England Saturday from New York. His wife accompanied him and they will be absent two months during which they will take an automobile trip through France.

The Daughters of Vermont have sent out cards for their annual breakfast at the Vendome, Boston, Thursday at 1 o'clock. After the collation a program will be given by Elma Igelmann, soprano; Maud Huntington, Benjamin, leader; Edith Christie Miller, violinist; Marjorie Lillian Verbeek, accompanist.

George W. Pierce of Brattleboro, master of the Vermont State game, Patrons of Husbandry, was made chairman of the committee on credentials at the national convention of the game held in Washington last week. In connection with the news report of this convention The Washington Herald prints a cut of ex-Governor Charles J. Bell, of Vermont.

The Canadian Pacific railway company has issued a circular to its agents that reads: "Effective November 1, 1908, the name of the station at Mileage 1544 Newport section will be changed from Masonville to Highwater." This change is made necessary by the confusion resulting in freight and express work since the opening of the new station on the Orford Mountain railway at Masonville.

The professional basketball season at St. Johnsbury will open this week. W. P. Gray is again manager and his team follows: Mathews and Swenson, with St. Johnsbury last year; Skeels Wright of the Lanter Athletic club of Jersey City; Ward Brennan of the Twenty-third street team, New York; Gus Kreuger and Callahan of Philadelphia.

The family of John Moran of Burlington have recovered from the effects of falling coal on Friday night. The family went to bed, having just started a fire in the stove. In the morning Mr. Moran was hardly able to reach a doctor because of his weakened condition. The other members of the family were in a worse condition but readily responded to treatment and all have recovered now.

During the absence of Dr. A. Elie, of Island Pond, last week on a hunting trip, his house was broken into at night, entrance being effected by means of a window. An unsuccessful effort was made to open the safe. A purse lying on the parlor table was opened, the money, $3, abstracted, and the purse left. In the doctor's bedroom fifty cents were taken from a pair of trousers. A thorough search of the rooms and downstairs was made, the thief or thieves evidently being familiar with the place.

Shot Sheriff in The Arm.

News has been received of a desperate encounter between Deputy Sheriff Freen of South Hero and a man named Allard. Allard was arrested by Freen on Saturday, charged with stealing butter, poultry, potatoes and onions from various people in South Hero, and was taken to the home of the sheriff. After reaching home the sheriff took the manacles off the prisoner, who retaliated by pulling a 44 caliber revolver from his pocket and shooting Freen. The bullet pierced one arm of the

SPOKE TO STUDENTS.

Dr. Grenfell was at Vermont Academy Recently.

The students and faculty of Vermont academy, and with them the citizens of Saxtons River and Bellows Falls, are fortunate in knowing Dr. Grenfell, the celebrated medical missionary from Labrador, no longer merely from reading the magazine and newspaper articles, but from personal contact with the earnest and engaging personality of the truly great man. On the afternoon of Friday, November the thirteenth, in the chapel of Vermont academy, Dr. Grenfell spoke to an audience of four hundred, who for an hour gave him their undivided attention. Dr. Grenfell's talk, which was delightfully informal, gave his hearers interesting glimpses of heart and mind in which an over-overflowing love to serve the Christ by uplifting mankind is combined with an unusual ability to apply practical solutions to the problems which confront one in his position. And through all his words there ran an undercurrent of humor and of gladness, telling plainly that here stood no martyr, no slave driven to his task, but one who, as he expressed it, had chosen his work and his field because he liked them, and one who was enjoying his work immensely.

Resolving to give his life to the missionary service, natural inclination led him, as a young man, just out of college, to choose the work among the sailors of the northern coasts. Here he found conditions most deplorable, and no one apparently making any exertion to better them. Find that the worst foe to the physical and spiritual well-being of the people was the liquor traffic, he took prompt steps to hold this traffic in abeyance. So energetic was he in his efforts, and to such a degree was he successful, that in a short time, in towns where the saloon had been the ruling factor, the church began to come into respect and prominence; and best of all, the international law was passed making it a crime for liquor to be sold on high sea, and giving to the gunboats of every nation the right to seize any vessel, sailing under the flag of any nation, engaged in this illicit traffic.

In Labrador itself, Dr. Grenfell quickly turned his attention to economic questions, having found the people in sad straits owing to the utter lack of money. Practically all business transactions were carried on by means of barter and exchange, and a large majority of men were unable either to "read, write or read figures," the few were getting rich at the expense of the many. This gave rise to lack of food, and sickness and starvation went hand in hand. Before the physician could do efficient work, the economic organizer must step in and prepare the way. In the case of Labrador, Dr. Grenfell ably filled both positions. As an economic leader, he organized co-operative stores, of which there are now eight, which assure to every man an exact value for his fish or game; and in his capacity of physician he was instrumental in founding four hospitals, situated at different points along the coast, where they might be of the most use to the poor fishermen who was in trouble.

At the present time it is this phase of work by which Dr. Grenfell is most widely known. Cruising up and down the storm beaten coasts, often in very grave danger, often suffering severe hardships, he visits countless sick beds, caring in the homes for the less seriously ill, and transporting to the hospitals all those who are on the danger list. In one year he has carried over one thousand sick men, on his little steamer, a service the magnitude of which is scarcely credible. He is assisted in this work by young men from the various colleges, Yale, Harvard, Brown and Bowdoin in particular, who take this means of being of service.

Although the speech of Dr. Grenfell at the academy was not a prepared lecture, it made an indelible impression on all who heard it, portraying, as it did, in such a vivid and realistic manner, the situation in Labrador at the present time; and everyone felt in some degree the satisfaction that is Dr. Grenfell's as he realizes that he is of some real service to the people of that land. Vermont academy is to be congratulated that her students have had this opportunity of hearing one so actively engaged in the great things of life. An offering for the work in Labrador was taken immediately after the lecture.
